GOLF GAMBOLS

JINX AT HOME.

Quoth Mrs. Jinx to Mrs. Todd:
"I never said a word
When a practice mangle from the Hall
Killed our canary bird.
I tried to smile, thought it was hard,
When, leaving rather high,
He smashed himself, his little portrait
And holed out in her left eye."
"And when the caddies were on strike,
It hurt me, I confess;
But he had to have a caddy,
So he took our little Bess.
He lonesome on the holidays,
But no complaint I've made.
Though vacation days are always spent Where only golf is played."

"Sometimes, with 'Fore' he leaps from bed,
Or tries shots in his doze;
And once he dreamed of a new swing.
But landed on my—
There's nought but golf at dinner time.
Each night is much the same.
The family sitting passively While Dad talks of his game."

"We've tee shot soup and mild iron roast,
And salad dressed with pitch,
And puddings putts, and coffee with His shots from water ditch.
Now, Mrs. Todd," quoth Mrs. Jinx,
"I've borne it all I'm sick
But when I have to EAT his golf,
I think it's time to kick."

There is an old precept in golf—"Never press." This is a good general rule, but undoubtedly there are times when a golfer should press a shot to the last ounce.
Let us suppose for example that at a critical stage when a match player faces a carry which ordinarily is beyond the limit of his normal stroke. He realizes that if he plays short his opponent must win the match and he must make that carry to save himself. Then he must take the chance of pressing—tearing into the ball with all the strength that he possesses in the desperate endeavor to achieve something extraordinary.

The negro caddies in our Southern States are delightfully entertaining and crafty, too, as this incident proves: One day a gentleman happened to hit one of the boys on the head with his driver.
He was genuinely alarmed and, although the boy was not at all hurt, he gave him a dollar as a bribe for his trouble.
On the following day, he was astonished by the sight of every black caddy in the vicinity trying to get in the way of his shots and butting at the descending balls in the hope of collecting as his fortune comrade.

CHRISTMAS.

'Tis the night before Christmas,
And up on the roof
Santa Claus is here standing;
His look spells reproof.
For the old roomy chimney Is now capped with pots in And he's got to get down with His pack for the tota.
His approach has been stealthy:
His drive far and straight;
But he's in a dilemma:
The hour grows late.
And in sorrow he murmurs—
'These pots are all bosh,
For I'm sure up against it,
I'm staying—By Gosh!"

The following excerpt is culled from a paper printed nearly twenty-five years ago:
"The links (at Dornoch) are on the outskirts of the town, and no houses overlook them. Cows and horses graze the putting green at sundown, and the women wash their clothes in the burn. To do this they tucked up their petticoats, and, in the usual shoe-less Highland fashion, step into the stream and dance on the self-bathed clothes until they are clean. The cows and the washing show how primitive the place still is. The cows show their appreciation of golf by eating the flags, which have been replaced so incessantly that an iron staff has just been bought to take the place of the waving red or white squares."

Two years ago Generals Botha and De Wet played golf together on the courses of the Pretoria Country Club. Little did either of the players imagine that within a few months one of them would be hunting the other, a rebel.

Many good stories are told of the observations of Andrew Kirkaldy, the professional, but here is one which turned up recently. As he was playing one day, a very pretty and attractive woman passed by, but it was a well-known fact that she resorted to cosmetics rather freely. Andrew observed when she was out of hearing: "You're a bonny lady! And how bonny, but a shower of rain would make an awful hash of her."
